

National Strategy on Domestic, Sexual and Gender-based Violence, 2010-2014

Final Review and Proposals for New Strategy

Introduction

- ✓ Please complete the questions below which relate to your area of work or experience.
- ✓ Be specific in your answers referring to particular actions under the National Strategy and to data, evaluations and reviews where possible.
- ✓ A key section of the questionnaire asks you to say what you can do under the next strategy. Actions need to be feasible, do-able and ambitious. Any wish lists under this heading should be labelled as such.
- ✓ The questions are purposefully open-ended. Please be as specific and as comprehensive as possible in your answers.
- ✓ Please remember specific developments or actions in relation to vulnerable or high risk groups, including Travellers, people with a disability, older people, migrants, young people, pregnant women and those involved with substance abuse.
- ✓ Do not expect to fill in each and every subheading; the subheadings are meant to prompt your memory.
- ✓ It is better to spend time developing the comment than agonising over which subheading it should go under.
- ✓ Do not get lost with all the subheadings; there are basically five questions:
 - 1. What was good about the strategy?
 - 2. What was not good?
 - 3. Have you any evidence either way?
 - 4. What do you want to do in the next strategy?
 - 5. What should others do?
- ✓ Your submission will be published on the Cosc website with the final review.

Name of your organisation: _____ Ruhama _____

Positive developments

As a result of actions under the current Strategy what, if any, positive developments have occurred in relation to domestic, sexual or gender-based violence under the following headings:

As Ruhama is primarily referring to its own organisational experience of the Strategy in the completion of this questionnaire, and given that prostitution was not included explicitly in the text of the Strategy, we are not commenting extensively on 1.1-1.8. There are a number of positive developments specific to the area of domestic and sexual violence which we acknowledge and know colleagues in the relevant organisations will be highlighting these, but the focus of this input will be the issue of prostitution as a form of gender based violence. This form was overlooked in the definitions of Gender Based Violence in the current strategy. Ruhama is seeking to see this rectified in the coming strategy. Ruhama have represented at the National Steering Committee for many years on the basis of recognition of prostitution as a form of violence against women and girls.

- 1.1 Victims' experience of state services
- 1.2 Victims' experience of voluntary sector services
- 1.3 Accountability of perpetrators

Amendment of the legislation to provide for protection in cases of domestic violence where couples have a child in common but do not live together was very positive.

- 1.4 Awareness and attitudes
- 1.5 Prevention
- 1.6 Policy making or service planning

There have been significant developments with the creation of TUSLA however, it is too early to assess in terms of impact on services to victims.

- 1.7 Research or data collection
- 1.8 Structures or processes to support the strategy (consultation, meetings, six monthly review reports etc.)

1.9 Outside the Strategy what, if any, have been the positive developments in relation to domestic, sexual or gender-based violence, generally or under any of the categories above, in the period 2010-2014?

In respect of 1.9 we note the positive recognition by the Joint Oireachas Committee of the explicit vulnerability of women and girls in prostitution and the direct connection between the exploitation of sex trafficking and prostitution.

Further all Irish MEPs, of all parties, supported the resolution (passed) in the European Parliament which explicitly acknowledged prostitution in all its forms to be a form of Violence against women and girls, given its highly gendered nature. (See Appendix below)

Ruhama has conducted significant work, alongside partners in civil society, an Garda Siochana, Health services and politicians to raise awareness of the need to respond to those in prostitution as vulnerable persons and offer supports to assist them.

A particular highlight has been collaboration with an Garda Siochana in developing and delivering training sessions on policing prostitution with such sensitivity. Also of note is a collaborative policing initiative in conjunction with Ruhama; 'Operation Kerb', which targets buyers for soliciting in Street Prostitution but offers support and assistance to the women 'selling'. This has been a highly successful initiative in Dublin 7.

Ruhama have, during this period continued to deliver high quality, innovative holistic supports to hundreds of women affected by prostitution and sex trafficking annually. We continue to collaborate very closely with the HSE dedicated sexual health services of the Women's Health Service to ensure continuity of care for women when in prostitution, exiting and exited.

The women Ruhama support frequently have additional experiences of abuse which include child abuse, sexual assaults and domestic violence because prostitution often features on a continuum of gender based violence. Collaborative working with a number of other voluntary services specialising in these issues to maximise supports is critical to a person centred and effective service. They may also face other challenges which can affect their support needs such as drug misuse and mental ill health, which required co-ordinated supports across voluntary and statutory services in areas of mental health and addiction. Between 2010 and 2014 there have been a number of enhanced working relationships developed to ensure that we can deliver services to best effect within constrained circumstances.

Undesirable developments

As a result of actions or inaction under the current Strategy what, if any, undesirable developments have occurred in relation to domestic, sexual or gender-based violence under the following headings:

2.1 Victims' experience of state services

The cuts within state services had a direct impact on our abilities to advocate and support service users given that there were limited resources available both in terms of service provision and the criminal justice system with reduced number of Gardaí. There is a negative impact also in relation to limited resources available to progress policy developments within state services.

An issue to highlight is that social Housing provision is a very serious problem for our services. Without housing stock available from local authorities there is a dearth of rental accommodation and also rapidly increasing rents which exceed the state provision of rent allowance leaving many women and their children effectively homeless.

2.2 Victims' experience of voluntary sector services

Huge resource reductions compromising services ability to respond to demand from victims of violence. Statutory funds were cut significantly year on year in this period putting excessive strain on Ruhama's services in the face of increased demand for services. The cuts to other voluntary services had a direct impact on our abilities to advocate and support service users given the collaborative nature of our case management system in some cases. There are more limited resources available all round to meet the needs of highly vulnerable persons.

2.3 Accountability of perpetrators

2.4 Awareness and attitudes

The omission of prostitution as one of the defined forms of GBV in the strategy precluded the inclusion of prostitution in education and awareness initiatives executed as part of the Strategy. These initiatives are designed to both inform on, and also prevent potential violence and abuse. There is an urgent need to include prostitution in such definitions in preventative awareness work, especially with young people who can be at particular risk of sexual exploitation, including prostitution.

2.5 Prevention

See above 2.4

2.6 Policy making or service planning

2.7 Research or data collection

- 2.8 Structures or processes to support the strategy (consultation, meetings, six monthly review reports etc.)

The reduction of the NSCVAW meetings from four per year to two is a very undesirable development. Likewise the current hiatus of the RACS.

- 2.9 Outside the Strategy what undesirable developments, if any, have occurred in relation to domestic, sexual or gender-based violence, generally or under any of the categories above, in the period 2010-2014?

The Evidence

- 3.1 What actions did you take to evaluate or review the impact of any of the actions under the National Strategy? Please forward copies of any relevant publications or documents.
- 3.2 Are you aware of evaluations or reviews by others of the impact of any actions under the Strategy? Please forward copies of any relevant publications or documents, or contact details of those who undertook the evaluation.

What can be done better in the future?

By you

What specific actions is your organisation proposing to undertake in the context of a new national strategy on domestic, sexual and gender-based violence, in the period 2015-2019, under any of the following categories.

The following responses have bearing in the expectation that prostitution is named in the new strategy.

- 4.1 State services for victims
Ruhama remains committed to continuing to maintain and develop positive collaborative working with state services to maximise best outcomes for service users.
- 4.2 Voluntary sector services for victims

Ruhama remains committed to continuing to maintain and develop positive collaborative working with other voluntary services to maximise best outcomes for service users.

4.3 Accountability of perpetrators /Awareness and attitudes/ Prevention (merging 4.3, 4.4 and 4.5)

Ruhama are the only voluntary organisation working exclusively to support women and girls affected by prostitution in Ireland, assisting hundreds of women each year. We provide information and data based on our frontline work, to raise awareness of the exploitation and harm of the sex trade in Ireland, which we will continue to do.

Ruhama delivers both comprehensive training and information sessions to a range of service users and educational environments from schools to third level institutions. If prostitution were a form of GBV named in the strategy would be pleased to input in relation to any planned education and prevention work relating to this issue.

Our work extends to our endeavours to advocate for policy development that will be prevent exploitation and protect those exploited. Prevention measures also take account of the need to hold perpetrators to account through criminal sanction and we will continue engage positively with the Gardaí and public representatives to bring about meaningful developments in these areas also.

4.4 Policy making or service planning

Ruhama hopes to engage with relevant bodies within TUSLA to collaborate on work in the area of exploitation of vulnerable children (primarily in the care system) in prostitution in the coming years.

In addition to representation at the National Steering Committee, the National Women's Council, The Women's Human Rights Alliance at national level. Ruhama is engaged at an international level with the European Women's Lobby and in coalition with frontline organisations across a number of countries to share data and advocate for an end to violence against women and the exploitation of prostitution. For example Ruhama advocate the signing and ratification by Ireland of the Istanbul Convention.

4.5 Research or data collection

In 2014/15 Ruhama plans to enhance its quantitative data collection system. The organisation is also exploring potential research with partners in relation children's vulnerability to prostitution, and some other research projects yet to be confirmed.

- 4.6 Structures or processes to support the strategy (consultation, meetings, six monthly review reports etc.)

Ruhama produces an annual report highlighting activities and trends of our work.

5. What specific actions is your organisation proposing to undertake for victims generally which will also apply to victims of domestic, sexual or gender-based violence, in the period 2015-2019, under any of the above categories?

As many of Ruhama's service user's experience multiple forms of violence as noted above, many of our actions to prevent violence against women and girls at a policy level have a direct bearing on victims of domestic, sexual and GBV who may not experience prostitution.

By others

What other specific actions should be undertaken in the context of a new national strategy on domestic, sexual and gender-based violence, 2015-2019, under any of the following categories?

Who should undertake these actions?

Please also state, with your reasons, if you believe that there should be no further action by anyone under any heading.

- 6.1 State services for victims
- 6.2 Voluntary sector services for victims
- 6.3 Accountability of perpetrators
- 6.4 Awareness and attitudes

Raise awareness of the risk and harm of prostitution among the public, policy makers and vulnerable groups to raise awareness of services and supports but also to shift attitudes which perpetuate responses to those in prostitution that minimise the harm and damage of this form of exploitation.

Please see comment below for further argument in favour of this recommendation.

6.5 Prevention

- See above 6.4. prevention work with the most vulnerable groups in society to reduce risk of grooming and exploitation in prostitution is critical e.g. with children in care; women who have an experience of sexual abuse; women & girls suffering addiction; poor migrant women; women and girls of ethnic minority groups...
- Awareness raising and programmes to educate boys and men about the harm of prostitution and challenge perceptions of entitlement to buy sex (including targeting sex buyers) as a part of any programmes on Domestic, sexual and Gender based violence.

6.6 Policy making or service planning

- As a minimal measure: Naming prostitution as a form of violence against women and girls in any new national strategy on domestic, sexual and gender based violence.
- Recognition of the need for and resourcing of supports to those trapped in prostitution as vulnerable persons.
- Recognition and resourcing of targeted interventions to high risk groups, specifically (as noted examples in 6.5 point 1).
- Resourcing of preventative programmes, including education and awareness programmes on domestic and sexual violence in schools and colleges, that explicitly incorporate the issue prostitution as a form of violence against, and a risk to, women & girls.
- The state should continue to resource the existing voluntary and statutory services supporting women affected by prostitution.

6.7 Research or data collection

Ruhama support the recommendation for the commission of a SAVI 2 research report in 2105 in order to evaluate the longitudinal impact of initiatives to reduce sexual violence in Ireland. This would be of enormous value in assessing successes and also gaps and failings in order to identify effective strategic policy developments for the future.

6.8 Structures or processes to support the strategy (consultation, meetings, six monthly review reports etc.)

- The NSCVAW should be restored to four meetings per year. The reduction to two meetings annually has seriously compromised the ability for this important committee, which brings together key statutory and non-statutory services.

- The RACS, or a similar structure to facilitate information feed up and down between the NSCVAW and regional statutory and voluntary stakeholders should be reinstated.

7.1 What specific actions should be undertaken for victims generally which will also apply to victims of domestic, sexual or gender-based violence, in the period 2015-19, under any of the above categories?

Resourcing of the over stretched services already in existence.

7.2 Who should undertake the actions mentioned above?

A number of stakeholders are required in order to deliver the above. For example: In relation to 6.4 & 6.8 COSC should undertake these actions. In terms of 6.4 a collaborative effort will be required between state and voluntary agencies such as TUSLA/HSE/Ruhama/Migrant & indigenous peoples Rights organisations and others. Resourcing of services falls along a number of state departments depending on the services in question.

Essentially a National strategy will require buy in from all the relevant stakeholders, statutory and voluntary –with critical emphasis on the various departments of the Government to ensure that a meaningful and impactful strategy can be rolled out from 2015.

And finally

8. Please make additional comments, if any, here.

1. Prostitution is a form of violence

- The vast majority of prostituted persons have suffered from violence, often sexual, before entering prostitution.
- The vast majority of prostituted persons are victims of many forms of violence while in prostitution (physical, verbal, sexual, psychological violence).
- The repetition of sexual acts without physical desire, but instead experienced as a result of financial need, inequality and/or as exploitation of vulnerability, constitutes in itself a form of sexual violence.

2. Prostitution is a form of exploitation of inequalities

- Prostitution is a part of a long patriarchal tradition of making women's bodies available for men's benefit (droit du seigneur, rape, "conjugal duties"...).
- Prostitution exploits multiple forms of inequality: men's domination over women, rich over poor, North over South, majority groups over minorities.

- The majority of prostituted persons within the EU come from poorer third-countries. When they come from EU Member States, there is an overrepresentation of ethnic minorities.

Factors involved

Research cites the following as some of the factors implicated in/linked to prostitution:

- Gender inequality
- Incest and other childhood sexual assault¹
- Childhood physical assault and abuse (physical, emotional neglect)
- Low self-esteem and self-worth²
- Social exclusion, poverty and homelessness including running away from home
- Force - being forced into prostitution by others e.g. family, trafficking of foreigners and related activities such as lap dancing, strip shows and escort services.
- Drug and alcohol addiction³
- Trafficking as a global trade
- Violence – including domestic/partner violence and rape⁴
- Racism and sexism
- Human rights violations
- Sex industry arguments and marketing in a sexually saturated society⁵

Obviously not all women in poverty, or drug addiction or who have been abused become ensnared in prostitution. The interplay of push and pull factors is complex and unique to each individual. However, it is clear that both the risk and reality of prostitution for millions of women and girls internationally are closely connected with other forms of gender based violence and can be said to be a direct consequence of gender inequality.

International recognition of prostitution as an intrinsic mechanism of Gender based violence. (Reference Source: European Women's Lobby)

There are numerous references, with some examples cited below, to prostitution as a form of violence against women; as an intrinsic component of the multiple facets whereby sexual & gender based violence manifests itself; an issue to which States must respond.

The most recent being the resolution of the European Parliament which is given as an appendix below. This resolution, as noted above, was supported unanimously by all Irish MEPs, across all parties.

¹ McGee H. et al (2002) p.227 International research reports that women working in prostitution have a higher incidence of child sexual abuse than women in general -. The most frequent contributory factor identified was child abuse or incest. Financial reasons were a close second. Also see Swedish Government Publication 'Prostitution and Trafficking in Human Beings' N5029 www.sweden.gov.se.

² www.prostitutionresearch.com and McGee, H., et al (2002).

³ McGee, H., et al (2002), drug addiction is often implicated but it is unclear whether this is a causal factor or whether, in fact, women working in prostitution become addicts because of their lifestyle.

European Parliament resolution of 26 February 2014 on sexual exploitation and prostitution and its impact on gender equality (2013/2103(INI))

“The European Parliament : ...

Recognises that prostitution, forced prostitution and sexual exploitation are highly gendered issues and violations of human dignity, contrary to human rights principles, among which gender equality, and therefore contrary to the principles of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, including the goal and the principle of gender equality;” [FULL TEXT OF THIS RESOLUTION BELOW as Appendix one]

1949 Convention for the Suppression of the Traffic in Persons and the Exploitation of the Prostitution of Others

“Prostitution and the accompanying evil of the traffic in persons for the purpose of prostitution are incompatible with the dignity and worth of the human person” (Preamble)

1992 CEDAW General Recommendation No. 19 on Violence against Women

Comment on article 6 of the CEDAW Convention:

“Poverty and unemployment force many women, including young girls, into prostitution. Prostitutes are especially vulnerable to violence because their status, which may be unlawful, tends to marginalize them. They need the equal protection of laws against rape and other forms of violence.”

European Parliament resolution of 2 February 2006 on the current situation in combating violence against women and any future action

“Whereas men's violence against women is an important factor in the lives of those women and girls who become victims of human trafficking for sexual exploitation, including prostitution, or other purposes; whereas surveys show that 65-90% of prostituted women have been subjected to sexual abuse in the past”

The EP “urges the Member States to take appropriate measures concerning men's violence against women in their national laws, in particular (...) to combat the idea that working as a prostitute can be equated with doing a job”.

European Parliament resolution of 5 April 2011 on priorities and outline of a new EU policy framework to fight violence against women

“Whereas violence against women encompasses a wide range of human rights violations, including: sexual abuse, rape, domestic violence, sexual assault and harassment, prostitution, trafficking of women and girls, violation of women’s sexual and reproductive rights, violence against women at work, violence against women in conflict situations, violence against women in prison or care institutions, and several harmful traditional practices; whereas any one of these abuses can leave deep psychological scars, damage the general health of women and girls, including their reproductive and sexual health, and in some instances results in death”

European Parliament resolution of 6 February 2013 on the 57th session on UN CSW: Elimination and prevention of all forms of violence against women and girls

“Whereas harassment and violence against women encompass a wide range of human rights violations such as: sexual abuse, rape, domestic violence, sexual assault and harassment, prostitution, trafficking of women and girls, violation of women's sexual and reproductive rights, violence against women at work, violence against women in conflict situations, violence against women in prison or care institutions, violence against lesbians, arbitrary deprivation of liberty, and various harmful traditional practices such as genital mutilation, crimes of honour and forced marriages; whereas any one of these abuses can leave deep psychological scars and involve physical or sexual harm or suffering, threats of such acts and coercion, damage the general health of women and girls, including their reproductive and sexual health, and in some instances result in death”

- A. whereas prostitution and forced prostitution are gendered phenomena with a global dimension, involving around 40-42 million people worldwide, with the vast majority of prostituted persons being women and under-age females, and almost all buyers being men, and whereas it is therefore both a cause and a consequence of gender inequality which it aggravates further;
- B. whereas prostitution and forced prostitution are forms of slavery incompatible with human dignity and fundamental human rights;
- C. whereas trafficking of persons, particularly women and children, for sexual as well as other forms of exploitation is one of the most egregious violations of human rights; whereas trafficking in human beings is growing globally, led by the increase in organised crime and its profitability;

- D. whereas work is one of the main sources of human self-realisation, through which individuals make a supportive contribution to collective wellbeing;
- E. whereas prostitution and forced prostitution are intrinsically linked to gender inequality in society and have an impact on the status of women and men in society and the perception of their mutual relations and sexuality;
- F. whereas sexual and reproductive health is promoted through healthy approaches to sexuality conducted with mutual respect;
- G. whereas Directive 2011/36/EU of 5 April 2011 on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting its victims establishes robust provisions on victims;
- H. whereas any policy on prostitution has an impact on achieving gender equality, affects the understanding of gender issues and delivers messages and norms to a society, including its youth;
- I. whereas prostitution functions as a business and creates a market, with different actors being interlinked and where pimps and procurers are calculating and acting to secure or increase their markets and maximising profits, and whereas the buyers of sex play a key role as they maintain the demand in this market;
- J. whereas according to WHO, sexual health 'requires a positive and respectful approach to sexuality and sexual relationships, as well as the possibility of having pleasurable and safe sexual experiences, free of coercion, discrimination and violence';
- K. whereas prostitution reduces all intimate acts to their monetary value and diminishes the human being to the level of merchandise or an object to be used by the client;
- L. whereas the vast majority of prostituted persons come from vulnerable groups;
- M. whereas procuring is closely linked with organised crime;
- N. whereas organised crime, human trafficking, extremely violent crime and corruption flourish in the shadow of prostitution, and any framework of legalisation primarily benefits the pimps, who are able to transform themselves into 'businessmen';
- O. whereas the prostitution markets fuel trafficking in women and children⁽²⁴⁾ ;
- P. whereas trafficking acts as a means to bring a supply of women and under-age females to the prostitution markets;
- Q. whereas EU data show that the current policy to combat trafficking is not effective and that there is a problem to identify and prosecute traffickers so that the investigation of sex-trafficking cases and the prosecution and conviction of human traffickers need to be strengthened;
- R. whereas more and more young people, among whom alarmingly many are children, are forced into prostitution;
- S. whereas the pressures under which prostitution takes place can be direct and physical, or indirect, for example by means of pressure on the family in the country of origin, and whereas such pressures can be psychological and insidious;
- T. whereas the main responsibility for addressing trafficking in human beings lies with the Member States, and whereas in April 2013 only six Member States have notified full transposition of the EU Directive against trafficking in human beings, the implementation deadline for which expired on 6 April 2013;
- U. whereas the Commission, in its Strategy for Equality between Women and Men (2010-2015), declares that 'inequalities between women and men violate fundamental rights';

V. whereas there is a huge divergence in the way that the Member States deal with prostitution, with two main approaches existing: one approach views prostitution as a violation of women's rights – a form of sexual slavery – , which results in and maintains gender inequality for women; the other approach maintains that prostitution itself promotes gender equality by promoting a woman's right to control what she wants to do with her body; in both instances individual Member States have the competence to decide how they approach the issue of prostitution;

W. whereas there is a difference between 'forced' and 'voluntary' prostitution;

X. whereas the issue of prostitution needs to be addressed with a long-term vision and the perspective of gender equality;

1. Recognises that prostitution, forced prostitution and sexual exploitation are highly gendered issues and violations of human dignity, contrary to human rights principles, among which gender equality, and therefore contrary to the principles of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, including the goal and the principle of gender equality;

2. Underlines that the health rights of all women must be respected, including their right to their bodies and sexuality and to be free of coercion, discrimination and violence;

3. Stresses that there are several links between prostitution and trafficking, and recognises that prostitution – both globally and across Europe – feeds the trafficking of vulnerable women and under-age females, a large percentage of whom are between 13-25 years old; stresses that, as shown by data from the Commission, a majority of victims (62 %) are trafficked for sexual exploitation, with women and under-age females accounting for 96 % of identified and presumed victims, with the percentage of victims from non-EU countries showing an increase in the past few years;

4. Acknowledges, however, that the lack of reliable, accurate and comparable data among countries, owing mainly to the illegal and often invisible nature of prostitution and trafficking, keeps the prostitution market opaque and hinders political decision-making, which means that all figures are based solely on estimates;

5. Stresses that prostitution is also a health issue, as it has detrimental health impacts on persons in prostitution, who are more likely to suffer from sexual, physical and mental health traumas, drug and alcohol addiction, and loss of self-respect, as well as a higher mortality rate, than the general population; adds and stresses that many of the sex buyers ask for unprotected commercial sex, which increases the risk of detrimental health impacts, both for persons in prostitution and for the buyers;

6. Stresses that forced prostitution, prostitution and exploitation in the sex industry can have devastating and long-lasting psychological and physical consequences for the individual involved (even after they have left prostitution), especially children and adolescents, in addition to being both a cause and a consequence of gender inequality, while perpetuating gendered stereotypes and stereotypical thinking about women selling sex, such as the idea that women's and under-age females' bodies are for sale to satisfy male demand for sex;

7. Calls, further, on the Member States to introduce, in accordance with national law, regular, confidential counselling and health checks for prostitutes, on premises other than those where prostitution takes place;

8. Recognises that prostitutes are a high-risk group for HIV infections and other sexually transmitted diseases;

9. Calls on the Member States to exchange best practices on ways to reduce the dangers associated with street prostitution;

10. Recognises that prostitution and forced prostitution can have an impact on violence against women in general, as research on sex buyers shows that men who buy sex have a degrading image of women⁽²⁵⁾ ; suggests to the competent national authorities, therefore, that the ban on the purchase of sexual services should be accompanied by a campaign to raise awareness among men;

11. Stresses that prostituted persons are particularly vulnerable socially, economically, physically, psychologically, emotionally and in family terms, and are more at risk of violence and harm than persons engaged in any other activity; national police forces should therefore be encouraged to address, inter alia, the low conviction rates for rape against prostitutes; stresses that prostituted persons are also subject to public opprobrium and are socially stigmatised, even if they stop practising prostitution;

12. Draws attention to the fact that women prostitutes have the right to maternity, and to raise and take care of their children;

13. Stresses that the normalisation of prostitution has an impact on violence against women; points in particular to data that show that men buying sex were more likely to commit sexually coercive acts against women and other acts of violence against women, and often presented misogynist attitudes;

14. Notes that 80-95 % of prostituted persons have suffered some form of violence before entering prostitution (rape, incest, paedophilia), that 62 % of them report having been raped and that 68 % suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder – a percentage similar to that of torture victims⁽²⁶⁾ ;

15. Underlines that child prostitution can never be voluntary, as children do not have the capacity to 'consent' to prostitution; urges the Member States to combat child prostitution (involving persons under the age of 18) as energetically as possible, as it is the most serious form of forced prostitution; urgently demands a zero-tolerance approach based on prevention, protection of victims and prosecution of clients;

16. Points out that child prostitution and the sexual exploitation of children are on the increase, also through social network media, where deception and intimidation are frequently used;

17. Calls attention to the phenomenon of the prostitution of minors, which is not the same as sexual molestation, and which is rooted in difficult economic situations and an absence of parental care;

18. Stresses the need for effective measures that allow special attention to be given to removing under-age prostituted persons from the so-called prostitution market and to preventing their entry into that market, as well as to focusing on activities contrary to the aims of the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child and its relevant Optional Protocol;

19. Takes the view that the purchase of sexual services from prostitutes under the age of 21 should be a criminal offence, while the provision of such services by prostitutes should not be punishable;

20. Calls attention to the phenomenon of 'grooming', involving the prostitution of under-age females or females who have only just reached majority in exchange for luxury goods or small sums of money which provide funds to cover day-to-day expenditure or expenses related to education;

21. Points out to the Member States that education plays an important role in the prevention of prostitution and the organised crime associated with it, and therefore recommends that special, age-specific educational awareness-raising and preventive campaigns be conducted in schools and colleges, and recommends that education about equality be a fundamental goal in the education process for young people;

22. Draws attention to the fact that advertisements for sexual services in newspapers and social media can be means of supporting trafficking and prostitution;

23. Draws attention to the growing role of the internet and social network media in recruiting new and young prostitutes through human trafficking networks; calls for prevention campaigns also to be conducted on the internet, taking into account the vulnerable groups targeted by these human trafficking networks;

24. Draws attention to some of the effects, mostly negative, of mass-media production and pornography, especially online, in creating an unfavourable image of women, which may have the effect of encouraging the human personality of women to be disregarded and of presenting them as a commodity; warns as well that sexual liberty must not be interpreted as a license to disregard women;

25. Stresses that the normalisation of prostitution has an impact on young people's perception of sexuality and of the relationship between women and men;

26. Stresses that prostituted persons should not be criminalised and calls on all Member States to repeal repressive legislation against prostituted persons;

27. Calls on the Member States to refrain from criminalising and penalising prostituted persons, and to develop programmes to assist prostituted persons/sex workers to leave the profession should they wish to do so;

28. Believes that demand reduction should form part of an integrated strategy against trafficking in the Member States;

29. Considers that one way of combating the trafficking of women and under-age females for sexual exploitation and improving gender equality is the model implemented in Sweden, Iceland and Norway (the so-called Nordic model), and currently under consideration in several European countries, where the purchase of sexual services constitutes the criminal act, not the services of the prostituted persons;

30. Stresses that as prostitution is a cross-border problem, the Member States should assume responsibility for combating the buying of sex outside their own territory;

31. Emphasises that some data confirm the Nordic model's deterrent effect on trafficking into Sweden, where prostitution and sex trafficking have not increased, and that this model is increasingly supported by the population, especially by young people, demonstrating that the legislation has brought about a change in attitudes;

32. Recognises the outcomes of a recent governmental report in Finland, calling for a full criminalisation of the purchase of sex, as the Finnish approach, which criminalises the purchase of sex from victims of trafficking, has proven to be ineffective in tackling trafficking;

33. Believes that legislation provides an opportunity to clarify what the acceptable norms in society are and to create a society reflective of these values;

34. Believes that looking upon prostitution as legal 'sex work', decriminalising the sex industry in general and making procuring legal is not a solution to keeping vulnerable women and under-age females safe from violence and exploitation, but has the opposite effect and puts them in danger of a higher level of violence, while at the same time encouraging prostitution markets – and thus the number of women and under-age females suffering abuse – to grow;

35. Condemns any policy attempt or discourse based on the notion that prostitution can be a solution for migrant women in Europe;

36. Calls, therefore, on the Member States to give the police and the authorities responsible for premises where prostitution takes place the right, in accordance with national law, to enter such premises and to carry out checks at random;

37. Urges the Commission and the Member States to mobilise the necessary means and tools to fight trafficking and sexual exploitation and to reduce prostitution as breaches of women's fundamental rights – in particular with regard to minors – and gender equality;

38. Calls on the Member States to transpose Directive 2011/36/EU of 5 April 2011 on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting its victims, and replacing Council Framework Decision 2002/629/JHA, into national law as rapidly as possible, particularly with a view to protecting victims;

39. Urges the Commission to evaluate the impact that the European legal framework designed to eliminate trafficking for sexual exploitation has had to date, to undertake further research on patterns of prostitution, on human trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation and on the increased level of sex tourism in the EU, with particular reference to minors, and to promote the exchange of best practices among the Member States;

40. Stresses that the Commission should continue funding projects and programmes to fight trafficking in human beings and sexual exploitation;

41. Calls on the Member States to design and implement policies to deal with trafficking, sexual exploitation and prostitution, and to ensure that all relevant parties, such as NGOs, the police and other law enforcement agencies, and social and medical services, are supported, involved in decision-making processes and work in cooperation;

42. Recognises that a vast majority of persons in prostitution would like to stop but feel unable to do so; stresses that these persons need appropriate support, particularly psychological and social assistance, to escape the sexual exploitation networks and the dependencies frequently associated with these; suggests, therefore, that the competent authorities put in place programmes to help persons escape prostitution, in close cooperation with the stakeholders;

43. Stresses the importance of appropriate training for police services and judicial system personnel, in a more general manner, in the various aspects of sexual exploitation, including gender and immigration aspects, and urges the Member States to encourage police authorities to cooperate with the victims and encourage them to testify, to encourage the existence of specialised services within the police and to employ police women; stresses the need for judicial cooperation between Member States in order to combat human trafficking networks in Europe more effectively;

44. Draws the attention of the national authorities to the impact of the economic downturn on the growing number of women and under-age females, including migrant women, forced to enter prostitution;

45. Points out that economic problems and poverty are major causes of prostitution among young women and under-age females, and that gender-specific prevention strategies, national and Europe-wide campaigns specially targeted at socially excluded communities and those in situations of increased vulnerability (such as persons with disabilities and youth in the child protection system), measures to reduce poverty and to raise awareness among both the purchasers and suppliers of sex, and the sharing of best practices are all key to combating the sexual exploitation of women and under-age females, especially among migrants; recommends that the Commission designate a 'European Week for Combating Trafficking in Human Beings';

46. Stresses that social exclusion is a key factor contributing to the increased vulnerability of disadvantaged women and under-age females to trafficking in human beings; stresses as well that the economic and social crisis has led to unemployment, often causing the most vulnerable women, including those further up the social scale, to enter the prostitution/sex business, in order to overcome poverty and social exclusion; calls on the Member States to tackle the underlying social problems that force men, women and children into prostitution;

47. Urges the Member States to fund organisations working on the ground with support and exit strategies, to provide innovative social services for victims of trafficking or sexual exploitation, including migrant and undocumented persons, assessing their individual needs and risks in order to provide appropriate assistance and protection, and to implement policies – with a holistic approach and through the various police, immigration, health and education services – aimed at helping vulnerable women and minors leave prostitution, while ensuring that such programmes have a legal basis and the requisite funding to achieve this aim; stresses the importance of psychological counselling and the need for victims of sexual exploitation to be reintegrated into society; points out that this process takes time and requires the development of a life plan that represents a credible and viable alternative for former prostituted persons;

48. Stresses that more analysis and statistical evidence is needed to judge which model is the most effective way of combating the trafficking of women and under-age females for purposes of sexual exploitation;

49. Urges the Member States to evaluate both the positive and negative effects of criminalising the purchase of sexual services on reducing prostitution and trafficking;

50. Calls on the EU and its Member States to develop gender-specific prevention policies in the countries of origin of persons who are prostituted as a result of being trafficked, aimed both at purchasers of sex and at women and minors, through sanctions, awareness-raising campaigns and education;

51. Requests that the EU and the Member States take measures to discourage the practice of sexual tourism inside as well as outside the EU;

52. Requests that the European External Action Service takes measures to stop the practice of prostitution in areas of conflict where EU military forces are present;

53. Instructs its President to forward this resolution to the Council and the Commission.
